On navigating the pandemic: "The pandemic created human level challenges that everyone had to face collectively. Navigating employee relationships through the pandemic required a much different approach than if you had something more acute like a health matter at an individual level. From inception Taylor Builders has been an employee focused firm and that has paid huge dividends throughout the pandemic.

"Before the pandemic we encouraged flexible schedules, established an unlimited vacation policy, provided robust health care options for all employee levels and company-paid remote work tools. These attributes combined with an open communication chain helped develop a team that was prepared to be resilient and we've spent the last two years trying to reinforce those values. Going forward we're going to double down on how we prioritize our employees and advance policies that reinforce that we value each and every person at a human level. My objective as employer is for all of our employees to believe their best future is with us and that requires much more than compensation."
